Effective board meetings can help create positive change. What are some ways that your board meetings could improve? (Select 1 or more.)

POSITIVE VIBES:

More than 50% of surveyed Arizona HOA board members said that their board meetings need a lift! Work with your manager to ensure that positive changes are included in the agenda (bonus points if you tie those back to your vision). When it comes to getting along as a board and agreeing on important issues, how well is your board aligned?

24%

Highly aligned.
We are like-minded and have similar values for our community.

46%

Mostly aligned.
We typically agree on the issues, but we don't immediately come to a consensus.

23%

Somewhat aligned.
We get along, but we don't always agree on what's important for the community.

8%

Not aligned.
We don't have the same values and we don't easily come to a consensus.

GUT CHECK:

While nearly three-quarters of surveyed board members said that they are highly or mostly aligned – not everyone on the board may think that. You and your fellow board members may want to compare survey results or take DiSC training (facilitated by your management company) to see if perceptions match reality.

Board education is everything. What are some topics you think would benefit your board?

49%

HOA legislation and regulations

39%

Board member roles and responsibilities

36%

Budget planning and reserves

36%

POLICY PRIORITIES:

Your board is making policy decisions that influence your community, so make it a priority to stay educated on topics like legislation, budget and board responsibilities. Make sure your management company provides regular training for your board.

A great association requires great volunteers. What kinds of volunteers make up your association?

We have a hard time getting any volunteers.

We get an average number of volunteers, but it's usually the same people.

We get volunteers who are there for personal agendas, not necessarily the community's best interest.

We get a big and diverse mix of volunteers who are there to make the community better.

GET CREATIVE:

Only 14% of surveyed Arizona board members said that they get plenty of volunteers with the right motives. To get more of the right volunteers, work with your manager on a creative communication strategy that fits your association vision, such as social media announcements and word-of-mouth requests. See more strategies in this article: <http://bit.ly/Committee-Tips-AZ>

Do you have any committees in your association?

46%

Absolutely!
They are a valuable asset to our community.

21%

Yes, but they aren't running very smoothly.

20%

No. We need them, but it's too difficult to get them started.

8%

No. We don't need them.

5%

Not yet. We're not sure what types of committees would benefit us most.

1%

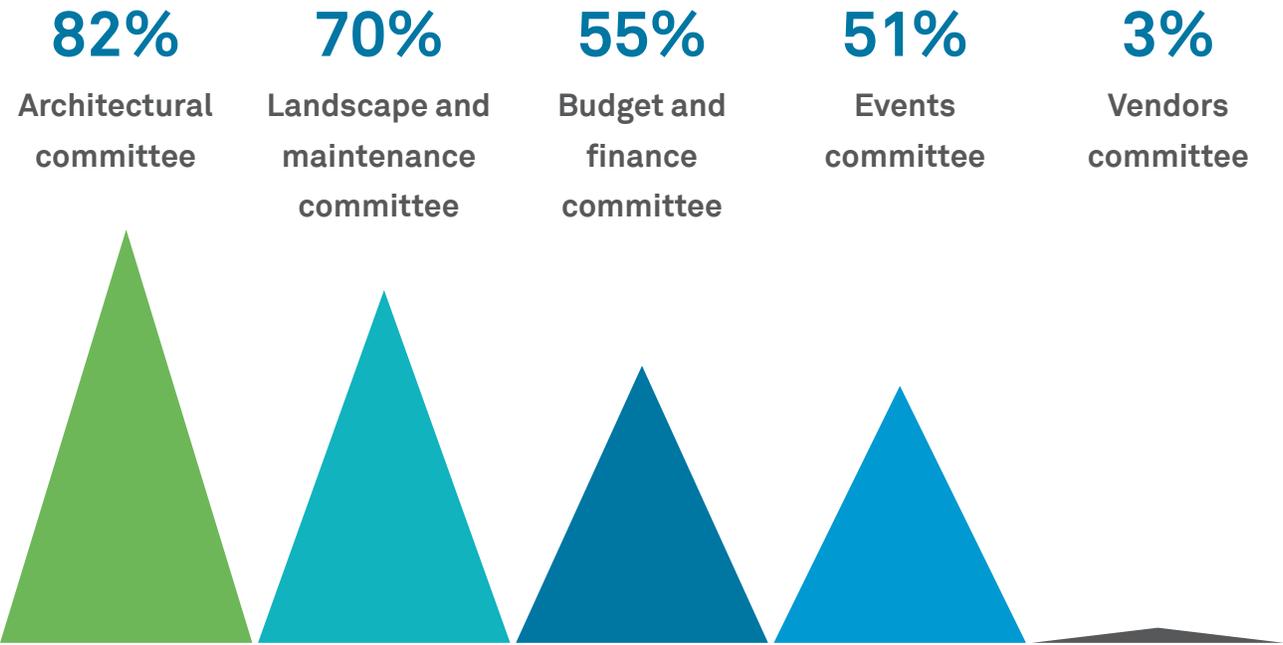

Not yet. But they're in the works.

JOIN THE CLUB:

Committees are powerful because they can help take the board member out of the hot seat when it comes to making recommendations and suggestions. Learn more about the power of committees in our article here: <http://bit.ly/Committee-Tips-AZ>

What kinds of committees do you have in your association? (Select 1 or more.)

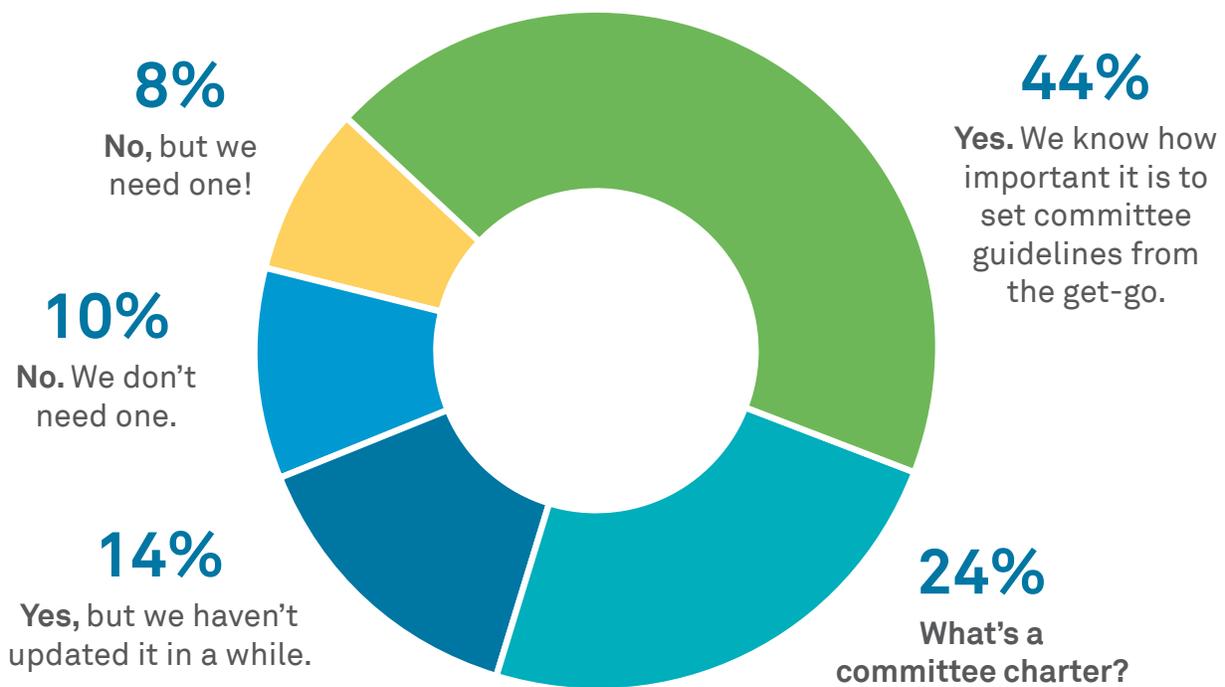

PURPOSE AND PASSION:

Make sure your committees represent your association’s goals and priorities. Before you start a new committee, ask, “what will have the most impact on our community vision?”

Have you created a committee charter?

WRITE IT DOWN:

More than 40% of surveyed board members said that they don't have a committee charter (or don't know what it is!). A charter sets expectations and goals for members, so that the group is aligned and working on initiatives that will benefit the community. Download our step-by-step charter guide here.

A great association brings people together. How important are events in your community?

28%

Important. We host a few events that are well attended.

31%

Fairly important. We try to have one or two during the year.

21%

Very important. We have several large events during the year that most of our community attends.

20%

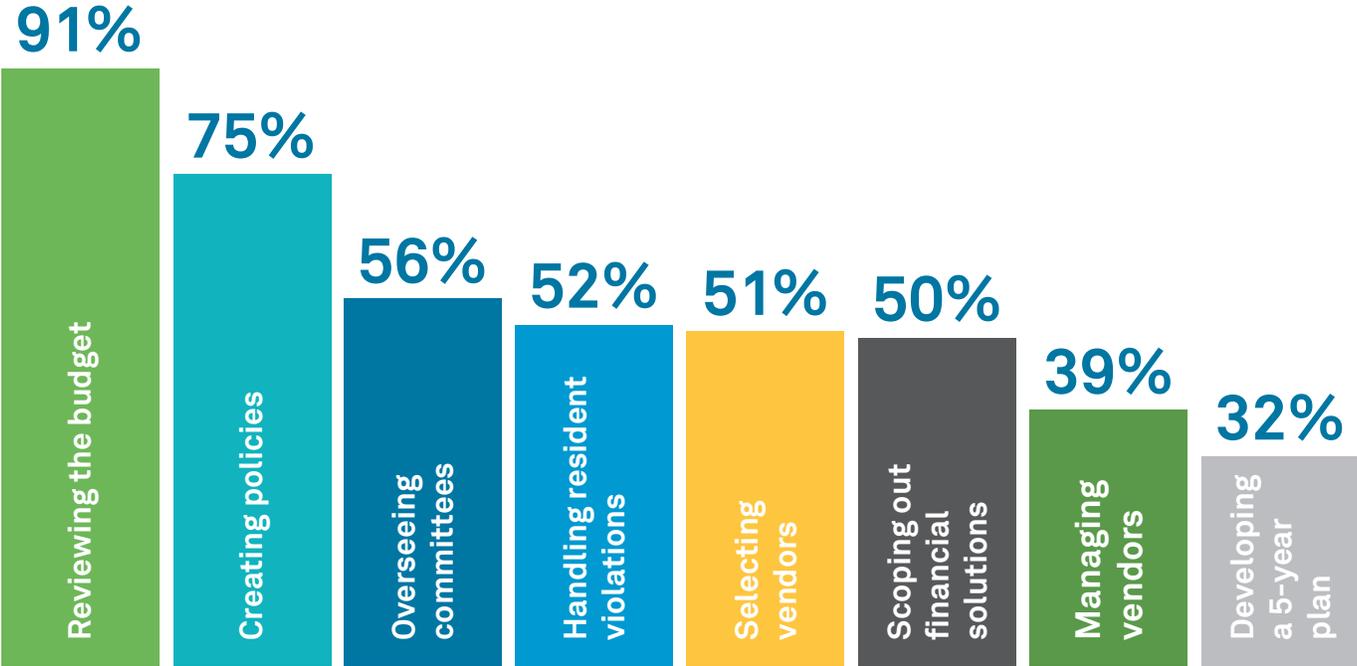

Not important. We don't need to have events.

MEET AND GREET:

While events may not be right for every association, they can encourage resident involvement. Host a “get-to-know-you” event, and you may end up meeting potential volunteers or committee members.

Your board’s roles and responsibilities can have a big impact on your association’s success. What responsibilities have you taken on as a board? (Select 1 or more.)

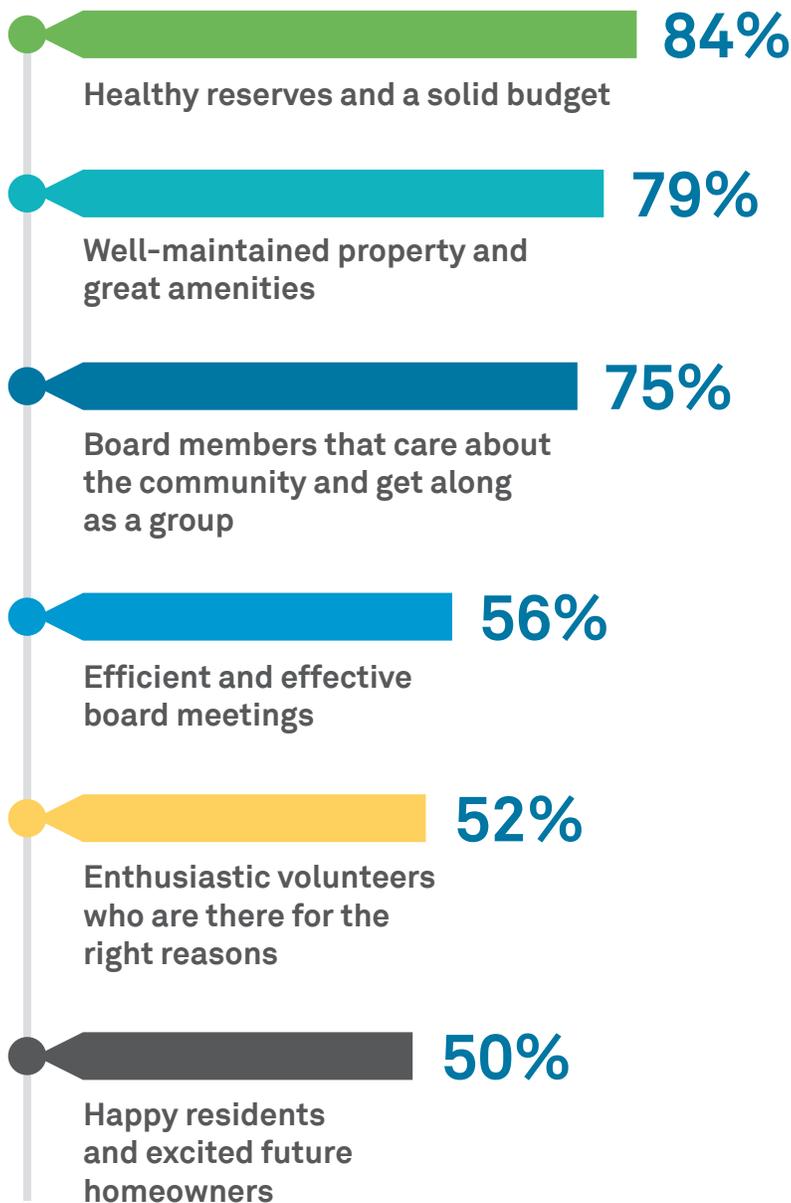

RED FLAG:

More than 50% of all board members surveyed said that they are handling resident violations and nearly 40% said that they manage vendors. Taking on violation and HR tasks can put your association at risk (including potential lawsuits). Your board should primarily be a “policy board” and give sensitive tasks to your management company.

A great association can be characterized by many different things. Out of the following qualities, what is most important to you? (Select 1 or more.)

PRIORITY CHECK:

While budget and maintenance ranked high on the list of most important qualities, 50% of board members didn't select residents as a top priority. Keep in mind that your association's reputation and property values are driven by happy residents and should be considered when creating policies and planning improvements.
